THE return of U Nu to the helm of Burmese politics is surely welcomed by Israelis, who regard the sage of RETURN Rangoon almost as a "sacof U NU bra." The visit which the Premier of Burma paid to this country two years ago is still fresh in everybody's mind, as are the declarations of friendship between Israel and Burma, which have stood the test of international politics with considerable success.

It is hoped here that now, with U Nu back in active politics, outside pressure will exercise less influence on the whole-hearted implementation of the existing agreements between the two countries. We have still to learn what will be the composition of the new Burmese Cabinet. However, it is likely that the new gov. ernment will continue the policies of the outgoing one, since the latter has pursued the policies outlined by the previous U Nu government. For the issues before the Anti-Fascist People's Freedom League, which rules Burma, have not changed.

League, which rules Burma, have not changed.

Burma, very 1.,uch like Israel, still fears most her immediate neighbours — although, unlike Israel, she is able to sit with her neighbours on the same international representative bodies and discuss questions affecting the whole area of which she is a part. Like Israelis, too, they know that they must be internally united and morally sure of themselves in order to counter efficiently the ever-present threats to the very existence of their state and independence, which will be eight years eld on Friday.

The return of U Nu is, undoubtedly, a pointer in this direction. When the "Old Man" of Burma retired he did not shut himself out of politics. Quite the contrary. U Nu was the ruler of Burma, without having any official status. On the internal front, he used his influence to impose the necessary changes in his own party, so that it might lead the nation with re-invigorated energy. But he also intervened very actively in foreign policy.

activities he succeeded to the point that leaders of his party decided that their apiritual chief could return to every-day polities with-out fear that he would have his efforts frustrat-ed by internal difficulties. It stands to reason that moral issues will now take precedence in Burmese po-litical life over the eco-nomic struggle in which Burma is still very bitter-ly engaged.

Hard Work Faces U.N. Assembly

Manufacturers, compelled to buy their materials from the State, complained of the delay and often the shoddiness, of supplies, and of the failure to pay them the promised dividends, and town and country alike raised an outer at the searcity and had quality of household goods supplied to the shops.

New regulations were at once issued ordering that the peasants' income must be the first charge on co-operativer earnings even before money was put to reserve. Businessmen were empowered to buy their materials when, where, and of what quality they pleased. The State Council promised that light industry should be speeded up. And it was announced that village shops and pediars would not be brought under State control—one wonders how such a multitude of tiny concerns could have been — since they played a valuable part in distributing goods and meeting local needs.

It is clear, however, that this was not enough and that this was not enough and that this was not enough and that the observance by Communist officials.
